A Murderer-Priest.

The following awful story is translated from the Wochenblatt of Augu- 5, 1888, pub | bottle lished in Buenos Ayres:

"In a few days a murder trial will be be gun in La Plata, Buenes Ayres, which will be of the most sensational character. Th perpetrator of the crime is Pedro Castro Rodriguez, a priest, and the victims were his own wife and daughter. Curato Rod riguez is said to have been born in New York, though his parents were natives of Santiago. A born Catholic, he became a priest early in life, but forsook his church in 1870 and tried to enter the Methodist circuit of Buenos Ayres. But the Methodist had no use for him, and Dr. Real, the presiding elder, declared him an ineligible candidate. In 1874 Rodriguez married Senora Rufina Padin, the daughter of a colonel in the Argentine army. He soon suspected his wife of unfaithfulness, whereupon he left her and went back to the Catholic Church, his wife baving been ensconsed in a cottage near by the church he had been placed in charge of. The question of marital infelicity seem ed to have been disproved about this time, for he again lived with her, and the next year she bore him a daughter.

"In 1882 he became pastor, or curate, of Olavarric, and also superintendent of public schools. He then left his family in Buenos Ayres, visiting them, as he admits, very regularly for a couple of months, and then less often, and finally not at all. In May of this year his wife sold all of their property, getting about $21,000 for it, which sum she put in a bank, to her husband's order, and then went with her daughter to Olavarrio, where she was received at the roverential residence. One of the choir hoys named Perrin, who served supper to Rodriguez and his family, thought them very much depress-ed that night and out of spirits. After this meal the curato took his guests to sleeping apartments, putting his wife in his own room and the little girl on a lounge in the parlor, he himself going into an adjoining room. While the woman and child were making their ar-rangements for the eight Redriguez left the house for a short time. On his return his wife laughtingly said: I suppose you have been out to see one of your parishioners?"
'No,' he said, 'I went after some pills to quiet your nerves.'

"After she got in bed, according to Rodriguez's confession, he gave her one of the pills and a glass of water. Shortly afterward such violent pains seized her that she complained of it, asking him what he thought caused it. Without answering her he got a hammer and pounded her on the head with it until she was dead. The noise of this brought the child into the room, whereupon Rodriguez put one of the pills into her mouth, forcing her to swallow t. Then he took her in his arms and carried her up and down the room for four hours to prevent her from making an out-cry or giving an alarm. Through the last two hours of this she was dying; but she who, as his statement shows, wanted the business over within time for him to celebrate mass in the morning. He finally smashed her head with the same bammer he had used on her mother. When the daughter was dead he locked all the doors, went to his study, where, in a disguised hand, he wrote a letter addressed to a mag istrate, and then said mass. This religious duty being done, he went to the office of Dr. Quilarte for a burial per-mit, but that gentleman being out the permit had to be sought from the municipal authorities, where Rodriguez produced the letter he had just written, which was to make it appear that the permit was for the body of a dead woman, which would arrive on the morning train. The permit once safe in his pocket, he went to an undertaker's, where a similar story was told, and where he ordered an extra large coffin, directing that it was to be delivered in his church that same evening. The coffin was accordingly taken there and placed next to the high altar, on which the curato lighted one of the candles. "The pastoral home being joined to the church by a corridor, Rodriguez tried to carry the dead body of his wife along this; but she was too heavy for him, and so he had to drag her instead, leaving a trail of blood to mark the course. The dead woman was unceremoniously flung into the coffin, face downward, after which her dead daughter was thrown in on top of her, and the coffin lid screwed down. The coffin was taken away the next morning, and as some blood ran from the awful box the curato coolly remarked that he supposed the poor woman within it must have died of some disease of which profuse bleeding is a phenomenon.

"All, likely, would have gone well but for the inquisitiveness of Perrin, the choir boy, who was very solicitous about his master's guests, and expressed a great deal of won-derment as to the cause of their non-appear-ance. Rodriguez informed him that they had died of heart disease and had been duly buried, and he also admonished the boy not to concern himself about them. But the boy was not so easily assured, and began looking about. Discovering the blood stains, which filled him with alarm, he hurried to La Plato and told Chief of Police Costa what he had found and what he suspected.

"Rodrigues was at once arrested, and the Chief of Police soon pressed him into a confession, though he first offered to pay 20,000 pesos to have the matter dropped. The main reason be gives for killing his wife is because she insisted upon living in the house he occupied, which, as a priest, he could not permit. So he felt compelled to rid himself The poison which he used on his sale by wife and daughter, he says, he stole from a aug17 drug store in the vain hope that he could thus put an end to his family without the shedding of blood.

"Rodriguez is forty-four years old and is wife was a charming and prepossessing
